DOLLY DIMPLES AT COLONIAL THEATRE

Mysterious and Valuable Young Woman Appears Before Large Audience.

Dolly Dimples appeared on the stage of the Colonial theatre last night after the first act of "The Sunny Side of Broa iway," and received a genuine out-tion from the large audience. In a whirl of splendor, the fair occupant, clad all in white furs and with a wonderful hat, the big green auto in which Dolly rides whizzed right out to the center of the stage. Dolly Dimples alighted and ad-vanced to the footlights. She stood a moment without speaking, while hun-dreds of opera glasses were trained on her by eager, scrutinizing seekers after her by eager, scrutinizing seekers after some means of identification. She turned her face this way and that, and called upon the audience to mark well every lit-tle feature or mannerism that might help to betray her this afternoon when she appears at the F. Auerbach & Bro.

appears at the F. Auerbach & Bro. store.

"Dear Salt Lakers." she said, "I'm here just to let you look at me. I haven't had time to prepare a speech, and so all I can do is to give some helpful hints and let you have a real full look.

"I want to say that you Salt Lakers are the most polite and respectful people I have ever met, but where is your irgenuity? I'm getting tired of being hunted and never found. The trouble is, you look for a beautifully dressed young women such as I appear before you now. But most of the time I'm not made up at all that way. My favorite guise is middle age. Often I've stood in your midst and watched you hunt and talk of me, and never once has anyone sought me out from the crowd nor considered the even a possible chance.

me out from the crowd nor considered me even a possible chance.

"I may even appear as a mother with a child. Once I did that in Omaha, and the babe went to sleep in my arms while I was shopping. It frightened me and I asked the clerk to call for a doctor. She did, but not until she had saluted me, and correctly, too. You see, she just took a possible chance and won. And when she led me away to claim the reward everybody thought she was Dolly Dimples and that I was the captor."

Miss Dimples then paraded just a little before her audience.

"Now look at me good, and remember my eyes and nose and everything about the control of the auto and was whisked out through the wings.

through the wings.

Enthusiastic applause followed her exit and it was necessary to delay the continuance of the perfermance until the demonstration had died away.

DOLLY ACTING AS SOLICITOR

I have since learned that he was Colone Joseph J. Daynes, fr., the president of the Daynes-Beebe company.

I first saw the Knabe room, which is artistically gotten up in tones of blue. The peerless Knabe piano, which has stood as a leader among pianos since 1847, looked like an old friend to me. I have seen it used by some of the greatest artists, such as the distinguished C. Saint-Saens, Emil Sauer, Eugene D'Albert and many other celebrated players. There were some elegant grands and uprights in this celebrated make. Two new styles were the J and V, just arrived, in beautiful cases, models of the craftsman's art and an artistic triumph. Another special art case was the Sheraton design. This make of pianos is too well known for me to describe its merits. I was pleased to see the well known Schaeffer pianos, which have always attracted me by their purity of tone.

He has carried it in stock since it was first manufactured. There were many other makes. In this palatial estimates the control of the control many other makes. In this palatial establishment one is struck at once with the great variety of beautiful woods used in the artistically designed cases. The new Hungarian ash is a handsome wood. Then there is the beautiful crimson vermillion wood, which is oddly and beautitifully grained. San Domingo mahogany, Circassian walnut and golden oak are among some of the other smart woods. What most interested me was the marvelous player pianos. One could listen to the Knabe Angelus all day. I do not play the plano, but I am intensely fond play the piano, but I am intensely fond

I became so enthused over the stock this beautiful store that I was seized with a desire to try and sell some of their eautiful instruments. This was what prompted me to help myself to a small pile of the firm's business cards which were on a small table near the entrance.

The way of the transgressor is hard. Armed with my package of stolen cards, I motored out to try my luck as a piano solicitor, being careful to moor my dear American just around a convenient cor-American just around a convenient corner before entering any street, and now I am positive that I am not gifted with the wit of salesmanship. I did not succeed in placing one, but I met some nice ladies and at one home I quite forgot, after I was ushered into the house, and got to talking to my charming hostess, that I was selling planos at all.

Over the sweet little lady's face flitted a look of such glorified infinite tenderness, that I too moved toward the hammock, which I had supposed was empty. Tucked into it and snugly covered, was a dear into it, and supposed was empty. Tucked into it, and snugly covered, was a dear little rosy-cheeked baby.

"My goodness! it's a baby," I exclaimed. "Oh, isn't it a sweet little libing!"

The baby opened his eyes and cooed. I laughed with delight. "You believe in fresh air, don't you?" I observed.
"Yes, indeed," she replied. "He sleeps out here most of the day, bless his old neart," she added in tones of maternal endearment, gazing at him with a light of fond pride in her eyes that is only f fond pride in her cyclic characteristic of a mother. My next call was on Mrs. Hart J. Fitzgerald of No. 1268 East South Temple street, who is one of the nicest little ladies it has ever been my pleasure to meet. She herself answered the doorpell, wearing a nice fresh morning dress identically the same color and material as Mrs. Wood's had been. She had an apronon, and I did not feel quite sure of her identity. I had heard that Mrs. Fitzgerald was an active member of the Y. W. ald was an active member of the Y. W. C.
